Having heard the story of Robert Keslou, and knowing it to be in substance the same as given to other parties in this city, I purpose giving the details publicity, in order that the public may judge for themselves. All who have listened to the story or the testimony will bear me out in the assertion that the whole demeanor of the man Keslou is of a nature to stamp his statement as truthful in every particular. I feel some delicacy in making the statement, as Mr. Lewis is dead; but I see no reason why he should be Mr. Keslou says: I went down to Jaluit in the Morning Star on her cruise last year and was discharged from the brig. I found John Crowell, C. A. Williams' agent, on the island trading, and went to work for him, making myself generally useful. Soon after Captain Pease, in the brig Blossom, touched at the island, and took Mr. Crowell off, leaving Mr. Lewis in his place. In about five weeks the Blossom returned to take off the cocoanut oil which had been collected. There was an oil station on the island beceiving the next bighest number of votes.
